A lustrous, elegant satin of "Orlon" acrylic fiber and silk is winning impressive acceptance by top-flight American designers. Inspired by the Hurel fabric so widely acclaimed at the Paris Couture openings in February, it is here used by Ceil Chapman in a costume that takes full advantage of its marvelous drape. This original cocktail dress shows Mrs. Chapman's new line, a sleek molded effect through the torso with focused skirt fullness. Slim and scoopnecked, with a beautifully draped bodice, this dress has a sheath-like skirt, intricately manipulated in back to form a free-swinging pleated panel. A rhinestone buckle just below the waist accents this fullness.
